RANIA MATAR

Rania Matar's photography was highlighted by Bloomberg (14 December 2012), where Frederik Balfour commented that "[her] images are powerful because of their intimate nature, and because they challenge stereotypes about Middle Eastern women and modesty".

Le Monde (18 January 2013) commented that "to highlight the transformation [of a child-woman into a woman], Rania Matar has accepted to be the invisible mirror of these girls, suspending all judgment, with the empathy and tenderness of a mother sometimes seeping through."

In addition, she was extensively reviewed in Singapore's flagship daily newspaper, the Straits Times (11 December 2012 and 21 December 2012), where Arts Editor Akshita Nanda commented "being born in Lebanon to a Palestinian father and a Lebanese mother allows her insider access to ordinary women living in extraordinary circumstances, perhaps the aftermath of Lebanon's 15 year civil war or the disputed territories of the West Bank".

Read her interview by Joobin Bekhrad in Artchib (14 January 2013), and her interview by Kurier (15 January 2013), Austria's daily newspaper.

On television, MBC TV, the Arab World's first TV network, carried a segment showing her work (14 December 2012), as did China TV (CCTV, 17 December 2012).

While Rania Matar's exhibition is on-going at Sana Gallery until the end of January 2013, the press coverage continues unabated, the photography specialized newspaper Le journal de la photographie (19 January 2013) commented that "For some, even though they are not smiling, one can see their sense of selfhood and the almost sensual pleasure in being photographed and in engaging the camera, while others are almost defiant in the way only teens know how to, and others still are more separate from the camera, show more angst and are more self-conscious" and the Singapore daily newspaper TODAY (16 January 2013) highlighted her show as one of its art picks, as did the Straits Time the 21 December 2012.
